Term	Definition
Job Scheduling	Job scheduling allows businesses to automate batch jobs on a single system and to submit these batch jobs for execution as a result of a specific event or at a certain time. Traditional job scheduling software works on one machine and is pretty inflexible. In complex systems, job scheduling has its limitations and inherently leads to a lack of coordination between operating systems, a high level of complexity when it comes to scheduling jobs and maintenance, the need for lots of manual intervention as well as the need for frequent programming to fill gaps.
Scalability	is the property of a system to handle a growing amount of work by adding resources to the system.
Service Level Agreement (SLA)	A commitment between a service provider and a client. Particular aspects of the service – quality, availability, responsibilities – are agreed between the service provider and the service user
Workload	Refers to a computer system’s ability to handle and process work.
Workload Automation	is the process of using software to schedule, initiate, and execute business processes, transactions, workflows, and other related tasks. It also allows businesses to configure or stop processes. The use of workload automation allows for all of this processing to happen without human or manual intervention.
Workload Scheduler	is a workload automation solution that enables organizations to automate, plan and control the processing of complex systems' workloads. It allows you to manage workflows from a single point of control across multiple platforms and business applications.
